whom \ˈhüm, üm\ pron, objective case of WHO [ME, fr. OE hwām, dat. of hwā who] (bef. 12c) — used as an interrogative or relative; used as object of a verb or a preceding preposition ⟨to know for ~ the bell tolls —John Donne⟩ or less frequently as the object of a following preposition ⟨the man ~ you wrote to⟩ though now often considered stilted esp. as an interrogative and esp. in oral use; occas. used as predicate nominative with a copulative verb or as subject of a verb esp. in the vicinity of a preposition or a verb of which it might mistakenly be considered the object ⟨~ say ye that I am —Mt 16:15 (AV)⟩ ⟨people . . . ~ you never thought would sympathize —Shea Murphy⟩ usage Observers of the language have been predicting the demise of whom from about 1870 down to the present day ⟨one of the pronoun cases is visibly disappearing—the objective case whom —R. G. White (1870)⟩ ⟨whom is dying out in England, where "Whom did you see?" sounds affected —Anthony Burgess (1980)⟩. Our evidence shows that no one—English or not—should expect whom to disappear momentarily; it shows every indication of persisting quite a while yet. Actual usage of who and whom—accurately described at the entries in this dictionary—does not appear to be markedly different from the usage of Shakespeare's time. But the 18th century grammarians, propounding rules and analogies, rejecting other rules and analogies, and usu. justifying both with appeals to Latin or Greek, have intervened between us and Shakespeare. It seems clear that the grammarians' rules have had little effect on the traditional uses. One thing they have accomplished is to encourage hypercorrect uses of whom ⟨whom shall I say is calling?⟩. Another is that they have made some people unsure of themselves ⟨said he was asked to step down, although it is not known exactly who or whom asked him —Redding (Conn.) Pilot⟩.

Xray \'eks-ˌrā\ (1943) — a communications code word for the letter x x–ray \'eks-ˌrā\ vt, often cap (1899) : to examine, treat, or photograph with X rays

X ray \'eks-ˌrā\ n (1896) 1 : any of the electromagnetic radiations of the same nature as visible radiation but having an extremely short wavelength of less than 100 angstroms that is produced by bombarding a metallic target with fast electrons in vacuum or by transition of atoms to lower energy states and that has the properties of ionizing a gas upon passage through it, of penetrating various thicknesses of all solids, of producing secondary radiations by impinging on material bodies, of acting on photographic films and plates as light does, and of causing fluorescent screens to emit light 2 : a photograph obtained by use of X rays — X–ray adj

X–ray astronomy n (1963) : astronomy dealing with investigations of celestial bodies by means of the X rays they emit

X–ray diffraction n (1924) : a scattering of X rays by the atoms of a crystal that produces an interference effect so that the diffraction pattern gives information on the structure of the crystal or the identity of a crystalline substance

X–ray star n (1964) : a luminous celestial object emitting a major portion of its radiation in the form of X rays — called also X-ray source

X–ray therapy n (1926) : medical treatment (as of cancer) by controlled application of X rays

X–ray tube n (1896) : a vacuum tube in which a concentrated stream of electrons strikes a metal target and produces X rays

x–sec•tion \'krȯs-'sek-shən, -ˌsek-\ n [x, rebus for cross] (1962) : CROSS SECTION — x–sec•tion•al \-shnəl, -shə-nᵊl\ adj

xu \'sü\ n, pl xu [Vietnamese, fr. F sou sou] (1948) 1 : a coin formerly minted by South Vietnam equivalent to the cent 2 — see dong at MONEY table xyl- or xylo- comb form [L, fr. Gk, fr. xylon] 1 : wood ⟨*xylo*phone⟩ 2 : xylene ⟨*xyl*idine⟩ xy•lan \'zī-ˌlan\ n [ISV] (ca. 1894) : a yellow gummy pentosan that yields xylose on hydrolysis and is abundantly present in plant cell walls and woody tissue xy•lem \'zī-ləm, -ˌlem\ n [G, fr. Gk xylon] (1873) : a complex tissue in the vascular system of higher plants that consists of vessels, tracheids, or both usu. together with wood fibers and parenchyma cells, functions chiefly in conduction of water and dissolved minerals but also in support and food storage, and typically constitutes the woody element (as of a plant stem) — compare PHLOEM xylem ray n (1875) : a vascular ray or portion of a vascular ray located in xylem — called also wood ray; compare PHLOEM RAY xy·lene \ˈzī-ˌlēn\ n [ISV] (1851) : any of three toxic flammable oily isomeric aromatic hydrocarbons C_8H_{10} that are di-methyl homologues of benzene and are usu. obtained from petroleum or natural gas distillates; also : a mixture of xylenes and ethyl benzene used chiefly as a solvent xy·li·dine \ˈzī-lə-ˌdēn\ n [ISV] (1850) : any or a mixture of six toxic liquid or low-melting crystalline isomeric amino derivatives $C_8H_{11}N$ of the xylenes used chiefly as intermediates for azo dyes and in organic synthesis xy·li·tol \ˈzī-lə-ˌtȯl, -ˌtōl\ n (1891) : a crystalline alcohol $C_5H_{12}O_5$ that is a derivative of xylose, is obtained esp. from birch bark, and is used as a sweetener xy·log·ra·phy \zī-ˈlä-grə-fē\ n [F xylographie, fr. xyl- + -graphie -graphy] (1816) : the art of making engravings on wood esp. for printing — xy·lo·graph \ˈzī-lə-ˌgraf\ n — xy·log·ra·pher \zī-ˈlä-grə-fər\ n — xy·lo·graph·ic \ˌzī-lə-ˈgra-fik\ also xy·lo·graph·i·cal \-fi-kəl\ adj

xy·lol \ˈzī-ˌlȯl, -ˌlōl\ n [ISV] (1851) : XYLENE

xy·loph·a·gous \zī-ˈlä-fə-gəs\ adj [Gk xylophagos, fr. xyl- + -phagos -phagous] (1739) : feeding on or in wood xy·lo·phone \ˈzī-lə-ˌfōn also ˈzi-\ n (1866) : a percussion instrument consisting of a series of wooden bars graduated in length to produce the musical scale, supported on belts of straw or felt, and sounded by striking with two small wooden hammers — xy·lo·phon·ist \-ˌfō-nist\ n

xy·lose \ˈzī-ˌlōs, -ˌlōz\ n [ISV] (ca. 1894) : a crystalline aldose sugar $C_5H_{10}O_5$ that is not fermentable with ordinary yeasts and occurs esp. as a constituent of xylans from which it is obtained by hydrolysis

y \ˈwī\ n, pl y's or ys \ˈwīz\ often cap, often attrib (bef. 12c) 1 a : the 25th letter of the English alphabet b : a graphic representation of this letter c : a speech counterpart of orthographic y 2 : a graphic device for reproducing the letter y 3 : one designated y esp. as the 25th in order or class or the second in order or class when x is made the first 4 : something shaped like the letter Y

Y \ˈwī\ n (ca. 1915) : YMCA, YWCA

Abbreviations

AND SYMBOLS FOR CHEMICAL ELEMENTS

The following list of abbreviations is not intended to be all-inclusive; it does, however, contain many of those most commonly used. Symbols for chemical elements are also included. Most of these abbreviations have been normalized to one form. In practice, however, there is considerable variation in the use of periods and in capitalization (as mph, m.p.h., Mph, and MPH), and stylings other than those given in this dictionary are often acceptable. For a small number of abbreviations about which the question of punctuation is raised very frequently, a note is added to the entry.

For a list of abbreviations regularly used in this dictionary, see the section Abbreviations in This Work in the front matter. Many of these are also in general use, but as a rule an abbreviation is entered either in that list or this one, not both.

For a list of special signs and symbols not readily alphabetizable, see the section Signs and Symbols in the back matter.

Biographical Names

This section contains the names of many notable persons both living and dead. Persons are generally entered under the name or title by which they are most commonly known. Entries typically consist of last name, personal names, birth and death dates, nationality, and occupation or status. Also included, when appropriate, are pseudonyms, original names, epithets, alternate names, reign names, and titles. The pronunciation and end-of-line division of elements in boldface are usually shown. The pronunciation and end-of-line division of names or titles in italics or roman are given only occasionally. Transliterations of names from alphabets other than the Roman have been made as exact and consistent as possible. For most Chinese names, the traditional Wade-Giles system has been used. The Pinyin system has been used only for Chinese still living or recently deceased.

A number of names contain connectives like d', de, di, van, and von. With some exceptions, chiefly American or British, names are not alphabetized under these connectives but rather under the principal element of the surname. If the surname of a person is usually construed as containing this connective, the entry appears at the principal element and the connective appears immediately after, separated by a comma:

Gogh, van . . . Vincent

If the full name contains a connective which is not usually construed as an inseparable part of the surname, then the connective follows the personal name.

Bee•tho•ven . . . Ludwig van

Birth and death dates about which there is little or no doubt are entered without qualification. Doubtful dates are followed by a question mark, and approximate dates are preceded by ca (circa). In some instances only the years of principal activity are given, preceded by the abbreviation fl (flourished). The dates of a reign or other term of office are enclosed in parentheses.

At the end of many entries are derivative adjectives with such endings as -ian, -ic, or -esque. While it is possible to form these derivatives from any name, only the more common are shown:

Dan•te . . . — Dan•te•an . . . or Dan•tes•can . . . or Dan•tesque . . . adj

Of necessity many abbreviations have been used. For a key see the section Abbreviations in This Work in the front matter.

Geographical Names

This section gives basic information about the countries of the world and their most important regions, cities, and physical features. The information includes spelling, end-of-line division, and pronunciation of the name, nature of the feature, its location, and for the more important entries statistical data. Cities in the United States having 19,000 or more inhabitants at the 1990 census and incorporated places in Canada having 21,500 or more inhabitants at the 1996 census have been included.

This section complements the A–Z vocabulary by entering many derivative forms:

Ab·ys·sin·ia . . . — Ab·ys·sin·ian . . . adj or n

Cos·ta Ri·ca . . . — Cos·ta Ri·can . . . adj or n

Mo·na·co . . . — Mo·na·can . . . adj or n — Mon·e·gasque . . . adj or n

The abbreviations used are listed in the section Abbreviations in This Work or in the back-matter section Abbreviations and Symbols for Chemical Elements. The letters N, E, S, and W when not followed by a period indicate direction and are not part of a place-name; thus N Vietnam indicates northern Vietnam and not North Vietnam. The symbol ✳ denotes a capital. Areas, altitudes, and lengths are given first in conventional units with metric equivalents in parentheses.

The Pinyin transliteration of place-names for the People's Republic of China is the first spelling shown; the Wade-Giles transliteration is second. Where no variant is given, the two spellings are identical.

ASPECTS AND NODES

☌	conjunction—indicates that the bodies have the same longitude, or right ascension
□	quadrature—indicates a difference of 90° in longitude, or right ascension
△	trine—indicates a difference of 120° in longitude, or right ascension
☍	opposition—indicates a difference of 180° in longitude, or right ascension; as, ☍ ♆ ☉ opposition of Neptune to the sun
☊	ascending node
☋	descending node

Biology

○	an individual, specif., a female—used chiefly in inheritance charts
□	an individual, specif., a male—used chiefly in inheritance charts
♀	female
♂ or ♁	male
×	crossed with; hybrid
+	wild type
F_1	offspring of the first generation
F_2	offspring of the second generation
F_3, F_4, F_5	offspring of the third, fourth, fifth, etc., generation

Business and Finance

a/c	account ⟨in a/c with⟩
@	at; each ⟨4 apples @ 5¢ = 20¢⟩
P	principal; present value
i, r	rate of interest
n	number of periods (as of interest) and esp. years
/ or ⅌	per
c/o	care of
#	number if it precedes a numeral ⟨track #3⟩; pounds if it follows ⟨a 5 # sack of sugar⟩

Chemistry

+	signifies "plus," "and," "together with," and is used between the symbols of substances brought together for, or produced by, a reaction; placed to the right of a symbol above the line, it signifies a unit charge of positive electricity: Ca^{++} denotes the ion of calcium, which carries two positive charges; the plus sign is used also to indicate a dextrorotatory compound [as (+) tartaric acid]
–	signifies a unit charge of negative electricity when placed to the right of a symbol above the line: Cl^- denotes a chlorine ion carrying a negative charge; the minus sign is used also to indicate a levorotatory compound [as (–) quinine]; it is also used to indicate the removal of a part from a compound (as $-CO_2$)
–	signifies a single bond and is used between the symbols of elements or groups which unite to form a compound: H–Cl for HCl, H–O–H for H_2O
·	is used to separate parts of a compound regarded as loosely joined (as $CuSO_4{\cdot}5H_2O$); the centered dot is also used to denote the presence of a single unpaired electron (as H·)
⌬ or ⏣	denotes the benzene ring

=	indicates a double bond; placed to the right of a symbol above the line, it signifies two unit charges of negative electricity (as $SO_4^{=}$, the negative ion of sulfuric acid, carrying two negative charges)
≡	signifies a triple bond or a triple negative charge
:	is used to indicate an unshared pair of electrons (as $:NH_3$); is sometimes used to indicate a double bond (as in $CH_2{:}CH_2$)
( )	marks groups within a compound [as in $C_6H_4(CH_3)_2$, the formula for xylene which contains two methyl groups (CH_3)]
⌐ or ⌙	joins attached atoms or groups in structural formulas for cyclic compounds, as that for glucose  $\overset{\ulcorner\!-\!-\!-\mathrm{O}-\!-\!-\urcorner}{\mathrm{CH_2OHCH(CHOH)_3CHOH}}$
=	gives or forms
→	gives, leads to, or is converted to
⇆	forms and is formed from, is in equilibrium with
↓	indicates precipitation of the substance
↑	indicates that the substance passes off as a gas is equivalent—used in statements to show how much of one substance will react with a given quantity of another so as to leave no excess of either
1-, 2-, etc.	—used initially in names, referring to the positions of substituting groups, attached to the first, etc., of the numbered atoms of the parent compound
H	enthalpy
^2H also H^2	deuterium
^3H also H^3	tritium
M	metal
R	organic group, alkyl or aryl group
S	entropy
X	halogen atom
Z	atomic number (for element symbols see ELEMENT table)
′	is used to distinguish between different substituents of the same kind (as R′, R″, R‴ to indicate different organic groups)

Mathematics

+	plus; positive ⟨$a + b = c$⟩—used also to indicate omitted figures or an approximation
−	minus; negative
±	plus or minus ⟨the square root of $4a^2$ is $\pm 2a$⟩
×	multiplied by; times ⟨6 × 4 = 24⟩—also indicated by placing a dot between the factors ⟨6·4 = 24⟩ or by writing the factors one after the other, often enclosed in parentheses, without explicity indicating multiplication ⟨(4)(5)(3) = 60⟩ ⟨$-4abc$⟩
÷ or :	divided by ⟨24÷6 = 4⟩—also indicated by writing the divisor under the dividend with a line between ⟨$\frac{24}{6} = 4$⟩ or by writing the divisor after the dividend with an oblique line between ⟨3/8⟩
E	times 10 raised to an indicated exponent ⟨4.52E5 = 4.52×10^5⟩—used esp. in calculator and computer displays
=	equals ⟨6 + 2 = 8⟩
≠ or ǂ	is not equal to
>	is greater than ⟨6>5⟩
<	is less than ⟨3<4⟩
≧ or ≥	is greater than or equal to
≦ or ≤	is less than or equal to
≯	is not greater than
≮	is not less than
≈	is approximately equal to
≡	is identical to
∼	is similar to; the negation of; the negative of
≅	is congruent to
∝	varies directly as; is proportional to
:	is to; the ratio of
∴	therefore
∞	infinity
∠	angle; the angle ⟨∠ ABC⟩
∟	right angle ⟨∟ ABC⟩
⊥	the perpendicular; is perpendicular to ⟨AB ⊥ CD⟩
∥	parallel; is parallel to ⟨AB ∥ CD⟩
⊙ or ○	circle
⌒	arc of a circle
△	triangle
□	square
▭	rectangle
$\sqrt{\ }$ or √	root—used without a figure to indicate a square root (as in $\sqrt{4} = 2$) or with an index above the sign to indicate a higher degree (as in $\sqrt[3]{3}$, $\sqrt[5]{7}$); also denoted by a fractional index at the right of a number whose denominator expresses the degree of the root ⟨$3^{1/3} = \sqrt[3]{3}$⟩

( )	parentheses	indicate that the quantities enclosed by them are to be taken together
[ ]	brackets
{ }	braces

—	(above the quantities) vinculum
Δ	the operation of finding the difference between two nearby values of a variable (as y) or of a function (as f) for two values of its independent variable (as x) differing by a small nonzero amount (as h) ⟨$\Delta y = y_2 - y_1$⟩ ⟨$\Delta f(x) = f(x + h) - f(x)$⟩
∫	integral; integral of ⟨$\int 2x\,dx = x^2 + C$⟩
$\int_b^a$	the integral taken from the value b to the value a of the variable
$\frac{df(x)}{dx}$	the derivative of the function $f(x)$ with respect to x
$\frac{\partial f(x,y)}{\partial x}$	the partial derivative of the function $f(x,y)$ with respect to x
δ^1_j	Kronecker delta
s	standard deviation of a sample taken from a population
σ	standard deviation of a population
Σ	sum; summation ⟨$\sum_{i=1}^{n} x_i = x_1 + x_2 + \dots + x_n$⟩
$\bar{x}$	arithmetic mean of a sample of a variable x
μ	(1) micrometer (2) arithmetic mean of a population
μ_2 or σ^2	variance
χ^2	chi-square
P	the probability of obtaining a result as great as or greater than the observed result in a statistical test if the null hypothesis is true
r	correlation coefficient
$E(x)$	expected value of the random variable x
π	pi; the number 3.14159265+; the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter
Π	product ⟨$\prod_{i=1}^{n} x_i = (x_1)(x_2) \dots (x_n)$⟩
!	factorial ⟨$n! = n(n-1)(n-2) \dots 1$⟩
e or ϵ	(1) the number 2.7182818+; the base of the natural system of logarithms (2) the eccentricity of a conic section
i	the positive square root of minus one $\sqrt{-1}$
n	an unspecified number (as an exponent) esp. when integral
°	degree ⟨60°⟩
′	minute; foot ⟨30′⟩—used also to distinguish between different values of the same variable or between different variables (as a', a'', a''', usually read a prime, a double prime, a triple prime) or between the first and higher derivatives of a function (as f', f'', or $f'(x)$, $f''(x)$ for the first and second derivatives of f or $f(x)$)

$''$	second, inch ⟨30″⟩
$^{0}, ^{1}, ^{2}, ^{3}$, etc.	—used as exponents placed above and at the right of an expression to indicate that it is raised to a power whose degree is indicated by the figure ⟨a^0 equals 1⟩ ⟨a^1 equals a⟩ ⟨a^2 is the square of a⟩
$^{-1}, ^{-2}, ^{-3}$, etc.	—used as exponents placed above and at the right of an expression to indicate that the reciprocal of the expression is raised to the power whose degree is indicated by the figure ⟨a^{-1} equals $1/a$⟩ ⟨a^{-2} equals $1/a^2$⟩
θ	angle or measure of an angle esp. in radians
$\sin^{-1}x$	arcsine of x
$\cos^{-1}x$	arccosine of x
$\tan^{-1}x$	arctangent of x
f	function
f^{-1}	the inverse of the function f
$\lvert z\rvert$	the absolute value of z
$[a_{ij}]$	matrix with element a_{ij} in the ith row and jth column
$\lvert a_{ij}\rvert$	determinant of a square matrix with elements a_{ij}
$\Vert A\Vert$ or $\Vert \mathbf{x}\Vert$	norm of the matrix A or the vector $\mathbf{x}$

A^{-1}	inverse of the matrix A
A^T	transpose of the matrix A
$\oplus$	an operation in a mathematical system (as a group or ring) with $A \oplus B$ indicating the sum of the two elements A and B
$\otimes$	an operation in a mathematical system (as a group or ring) with $A \otimes B$ indicating the product of the two elements A and B
$[x]$	the greatest integer not greater than x
(a,b)	the open interval $a < x < b$
$[a,b]$	the closed interval $a \leq x \leq b$
$\aleph_0$	aleph-null
ω	the ordinal number of the positive integers
$\ni$ or :	such that ⟨choose a and $b \ni a + b = 6$⟩
$\exists$	there exists ⟨$\exists\, a \ni a + 2 = 4$⟩
$\forall$	for every, for all ⟨$\forall\, a \ni a$ is a real number, $a^2 \geq 0$⟩
$\cup$	union of two sets
$\cap$	intersection of two sets
$\subset$	is included in, is a subset of
$\supset$	contains as a subset
$\in$ or ϵ	is an element of
$\notin$	is not an element of
Λ or 0 or $\emptyset$ or $\{\ \}$	empty set, null set

Medicine

ĀĀ, Ā, or $\overline{aa}$	ana; of each
℞	take—used on prescriptions; prescription; treatment
☠	poison

A Handbook of Style

Punctuation

The English writing system uses punctuation marks to separate groups of words for meaning and emphasis; to convey an idea of the variations of pitch, volume, pauses, and intonations of speech; and to help avoid contextual ambiguity. The use of the standard English punctuation marks is discussed in the following pages; examples are provided to illustrate the general rules.

’ Apostrophe

1. Indicates the possessive case of nouns and indefinite pronouns. The possessive case of almost all singular nouns may be formed by adding ’s. Traditionally, however, only the apostrophe is added when the s would not be pronounced in normal speech. The possessive case of plural nouns ending in s or in an \s\ or \z\ sound is generally formed by adding an apostrophe only; the possessive of irregular plurals is formed by adding ’s.

   her mother-in-law’s car anyone’s guess
   the boy’s mother
   the boys’ mothers
   Degas’s drawings
   Knox’s products
   Aristophanes’ play
   for righteousness’ sake
   the Stephenses’ house
   children’s laughter

2. Marks omission of letters in contracted words.

   didn’t o’clock
   hang ’em up

3. Marks omission of digits in numbers.

   class of ’83

4. Is often used to form plurals of letters, figures, punctuated abbreviations, symbols, and words referred to as words.

   Dot your i’s and cross your t’s.
   His 1’s and his 7’s looked alike.
   Two of the junior faculty have Ph.D.’s.
   She has trouble pronouncing her the’s.

[ ] Brackets

1. Set off interpolated editorial matter within quoted material.

   He wrote, “I ain’t [sic] going.”

   Vaulting ambition, which o’erleaps itself
   And falls on the other [side].
   —Shakespeare

2. Function as parentheses within parentheses.

   Bowman Act (22 Stat., ch. 4, § [or sec.] 4, p. 50)

3. Set off phonetic symbols and transcriptions.

   [t] in British duty
   the word is pronounced [ˈek-sə-jənt]

: Colon

1. Introduces a clause or phrase that explains, illustrates, amplifies, or restates what has gone before.

   The sentence was poorly constructed: it lacked both unity and coherence.

2. Directs attention to an appositive.

   He had only one pleasure: eating.

3. Introduces a series.

   Three abstained: England, France, and Belgium.

4. Introduces lengthy quoted material set off from the rest of a text by indentation but not by quotation marks.

   I quote from the text of Chapter One:

5. Separates elements in page references, in bibliographical and biblical citations, and in set formulas used to express ratios and time.

Journal of the American Medical Association 48:356

Stendhal, Love (New York: Penguin, 1975)

John 4:10   a ratio of 3:5   8:30 a.m.

6. Separates titles and subtitles (as of books).

Battle Cry of Freedom: The Era of the Civil War

7. Follows the salutation in formal correspondence.

Dear Sir or Madam:

Ladies and Gentlemen:

8. Punctuates headings in memorandums and formal correspondence.

TO: VIA:

SUBJECT: REFERENCE:

Comma ,

1. Separates main clauses joined by a coordinating conjunction (such as and, but, or, nor, or for), and sometimes short parallel clauses not joined by conjunctions.

She knew very little about him, and he volunteered nothing.

I came, I saw, I conquered.

2. Sets off an adverbial clause or a long adverbial phrase that precedes or interrupts the main clause.

When she discovered the answer, she reported it to us.

The report, after being read aloud, was put up for consideration.

3. Sets off transitional words and expressions (such as on the contrary, on the other hand), conjunctive adverbs (such as consequently, furthermore, however), and expressions that introduce an illustration or example (such as namely, for example).

My partner, on the other hand, remains unconvinced.

The regent's whim, however, threw the negotiations into chaos.

She responded as completely as she could; that is, she answered each of the individual questions specifically.

4. Sets off contrasting and opposing expressions within sentences.

The cost is not $65.00, but $56.65.

He changed his style, not his ethics.

5. Separates words, phrases, or clauses in series. (Many omit the comma before the conjunction introducing the last item in a series when no ambiguity results.)

He was young, eager, and restless.

It requires one to travel constantly, to have no private life, and to live on almost nothing.

Be sure to pack a flashlight, a sweater and an extra pair of socks.

6. Separates coordinate adjectives modifying a noun. However, a comma is not used between two adjectives when the first modifies the combination of the second adjective and the word or phrase it modifies.

The harsh, damp, piercing wind cut through his jacket.

a low common denominator

7. Sets off parenthetical elements such as nonrestrictive clauses and phrases.

Our guide, who wore a blue beret, was an experienced traveler.

We visited Gettysburg, site of the famous battle.

The book's author, Marie Jones, was an accomplished athlete.

8. Introduces a direct quotation, terminates a direct quotation that is neither a question nor an exclamation, and sets off split quotations. The comma is not used with quotations that are tightly integrated into the sentences in which they appear (e.g., as subject or predicate nominatives) or those that do not represent actual dialogue.

Mary said, "I am leaving."

"I am leaving," Mary said.

"I am leaving," Mary said with determination, "even if you want me to stay."

"The computer is down" was the reply she feared.

The fact that he said he was about to "faint from hunger" doesn't mean he actually fainted.

9. Sets off words in direct address, absolute phrases, and mild interjections.

You may go, John, if you wish.

I fear their encounter, his temper being what it is.

Ah, that's my idea of an excellent dinner.

10. Separates a tag question from the rest of the sentence.

It's a fine day, isn't it?

11. Indicates the omission of a word or words used in a parallel construction earlier in the sentence. When the meaning of the sentence is quite clear without the comma, the comma is omitted.

Common stocks are preferred by some investors; bonds, by others.

He was in love with her and she with him.

12. Is used to avoid ambiguity that might arise from adjacent words.

To Mary, Jane was someone special.

13. Is used to divide digits in numbers into groups of three; however, it is generally not used in pagination, in dates, or in street numbers, and sometimes not used in numbers with four digits.

4,550 cars   Smithville, pop. 100,000

but

page 1411   4507 Main St.

3600 rpm   the year 1983

14. Punctuates an inverted name.

> Morton, William A.

15. Separates a surname from a following title or degree and often from the words "Junior" and "Senior" and their abbreviations.

> Sandra H. Cobb, Vice President
>
> Jesse Ginsburg, D.D.M.

16. Sets off geographical names (such as state or country from city), elements of dates, and addresses. When just the month and the year are given in a date, the comma is usually omitted.

> Shreveport, Louisiana, is the site of a large air base.
>
> On Sunday, June 23, 1940, he was wounded.
>
> Number 10 Downing Street, London, is a famous address.
>
> She began her career in April 1993 at a modest salary.

17. Follows the salutation in informal correspondence, and follows the complimentary close of a letter.

> Dear Mark,
>
> Affectionately,
>
> Very truly yours,

— Dash

1. Usually marks an abrupt change or break in the continuity of a sentence.

> When in 1960 the stockpile was sold off—indeed, dumped as surplus—natural rubber sales were hard hit.—Barry Commoner

2. Is sometimes used in place of commas or parentheses when special emphasis is required.

> The presentations—and especially the one by Ms. Dow—impressed the audience.

3. Introduces a statement that explains, summarizes, or expands on what precedes it.

> Oil, steel, and wheat—these are the sinews of industrialization.
>
> The motion was then tabled—that is, removed indefinitely from consideration.

4. Often precedes the attribution of a quotation.

> My foot is on my native heath. . . . —Sir Walter Scott

5. Sets off an interrupting clause or phrase. The dash takes the place of a comma that would ordinarily set off the clause, but an exclamation point or question mark is retained.

> If we don't succeed—and the critics say we won't—then the whole project is in jeopardy.
>
> They are demanding that everything—even the marshland!—be transferred to the new trust.
>
> Your question—it was your question, wasn't it, Mr. Jones?—just can't be answered.

. . .   . Ellipsis (or Suspension Points)

1. Indicates the omission of one or more words within a quoted passage. When four dots are used, the ellipsis indicates the omission of one or more sentences within the passage or the omission of words at the end of a sentence. The first or the last of the four dots is a period.

> In the little world in which children have their existence, . . . there is nothing so finely perceived and so finely felt as injustice.—Charles Dickens
> Security is mostly a superstition. . . . Avoiding danger is no safer in the long run than outright exposure. . . . Life is either a daring adventure or nothing.—Helen Keller

2. Usually indicates omission of one or more lines of poetry when ellipsis is extended the length of the line.

> I think that I shall never see
> A poem lovely as a tree
> . . . .
> Poems are made by fools like me,
> But only God can make a tree.
> —Joyce Kilmer

3. Indicates halting speech or an unfinished sentence in dialogue.

> "I'd like to . . . that is . . . if you don't mind. . . ."

! Exclamation Point

1. Ends an emphatic phrase or sentence.

> Get out of here!
>
> Her notorious ostentation—she flew her friends to Bangkok for her birthday parties!—was feasted on by the popular press.

2. Ends an emphatic interjection.

> Encore!
>
> All of this proves—at long last!—that we were right from the start.

- Hyphen

The hyphen is often used between parts of a compound. The styling of such words varies; when in doubt, see the entry in the dictionary at its own place or in a list of undefined words at an individual prefix. For unentered compounds, advice will be found in Merriam-Webster's Manual for Writers and Editors or a comparable guide.

1. Is often used between a prefix and root, especially whenever the root is capitalized, when two identical vowels come together, or when the resulting word could be confused with another identically spelled word.

> pre-Renaissance   co-opted anti-inflationary

re-cover a sofa

but

recover from an illness

2. Is used in some compounds, especially those containing prepositions.

president-elect

good-for-nothing

falling-out

sister-in-law

over-the-counter

write-off

3. Is often used in compound modifiers in attributive position.

traveling in a fast-moving van

She has gray-green eyes.

a come-as-you-are party

4. Suspends the first element of a hyphenated compound or a prefix (hyphenated or not) when the second element or base word is part of a following hyphenated compound or derived form.

a six- or eight-cylinder engine

pre- and postadolescent trauma

5. Marks division of a word at the end of a line.

The ruling passion of his life

6. Is used in writing out compound numbers between 21 and 99.

thirty-four

one hundred thirty-eight

7. Is often used between the numerator and the denominator in writing out fractions, especially when they are used as modifiers. However, fractions used as nouns are often written as open compounds, especially when either the numerator or the denominator already contains a hyphen.

a two-thirds majority of the vote

three fifths of her paycheck

one seventy-second of an inch

8. Serves as an equivalent of through or (up) to and including when used between indicators of range such as numbers and dates. (In typeset material the longer en dash is used.)

pages 40–98

the years 1980–89

9. Serves as the equivalent of to, and, or versus in indicating linkage or opposition. (In typeset material the longer en dash is used.)

the New York–Paris flight

the Hardy–Weinberg law

the Lincoln–Douglas Debates

The final score was 7–2.

Hyphen, Double ⸗

1. Is used at the end-of-line division of a hyphenated compound to indicate that the compound is hyphenated and not closed.

self⸗ [end of line] seeker

but

self- [end of line] same

Parentheses ( )

1. Enclose words, numbers, phrases, or clauses that provide examples, explanations, or supplementary material that does not essentially alter the meaning of the sentence.

Three old destroyers (all now out of commission) will be scrapped.

He has followed the fortunes of the modern renaissance (al-Nahdad) in the Arabic-speaking world.

2. Enclose numerals that confirm a written number in a text.

Delivery will be made in thirty (30) days.

3. Enclose numbers or letters in a series.

We must set forth (1) our long-term goals, (2) our immediate objectives, and (3) the means at our disposal.

4. Enclose abbreviations that follow their spelled-out forms or spelled-out forms that follow their abbreviations.

a ruling by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC)

the manufacture and disposal of PVC (polyvinyl chloride)

5. Indicate alternative terms.

Please indicate the lecture(s) you would like to attend.

6. Enclose publication data in footnotes and endnotes.

Marguerite Yourcenar, The Dark Brain of Piranesi and Other Essays (New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1985), p. 9.

7. Are used with other punctuation marks in the following ways:

If the parenthetic expression is an independent sentence standing alone, its first word is capitalized and a period is included inside the last parenthesis. However, if the parenthetic expression, even if it could stand alone as a sentence, occurs within a sentence, it is uncapitalized and has no sentence period but may have an exclamation point, a question mark, a period for an abbreviation, or quotation marks within the closing parenthesis.

The discussion was held in the boardroom. (The results are still confidential.)

Although we liked the restaurant (their Italian food was the best), we seldom went there.

After waiting in line for an hour (why do we do these things?), we finally left.

> Years ago, someone (I wish I could remember who!) told me about it.
>
> What was once informally known as A.B.D. status is now often recognized by the degree of Master of Philosophy (M. Phil.).
>
> He was depressed ("I must resign") and refused to do anything.

No punctuation mark should be placed directly before parenthetical material in a sentence; if a break is required, punctuation should be placed after the final parenthesis.

> I'll get back to you tomorrow (Friday), when I have more details.

. Period

1. Ends sentences or sentence fragments that are neither interrogatory nor exclamatory.

> Not bad.
>
> Give it your best.
>
> I gave it my best.
>
> He asked if she had given it her best.

2. Follows some abbreviations and contractions.

> Dr. A.D. ibid. i.e.
> Jr. etc. cont.

3. Is normally used with an individual's initials.

> F. Scott Fitzgerald
>
> T. S. Eliot

4. Is used after numerals and letters in vertical enumerations and outlines.

> Required skills are:
> 1. Shorthand
> 2. Typing
> 3. Transcription
>
> I. Objectives
> A. Economy
> 1. low initial cost
> 2. low maintenance cost
> B. Ease of operation

? Question Mark

1. Ends a direct question.

> How did she do it?
>
> "How did she do it?" he asked.

2. Ends a question that is part of a larger sentence, but not an indirect question.

> How did she do it? was the question on each person's mind.
>
> He wondered, Will it work?
>
> He wondered whether it would work.

3. Indicates the writer's ignorance or uncertainty.

> Geoffrey Chaucer, English poet (1342?–1400)

" " Quotation Marks, Double

1. Enclose direct quotations but not indirect quotations.

> She said, "I am leaving."
> She said that she was leaving.

2. Enclose words or phrases borrowed from others, words used in a special way, and words of marked informality when introduced into formal writing.

> Much of the population in the hellish future he envisions is addicted to "derms," patches that deliver potent drug doses instantaneously through the skin.
> He called himself "emperor," but he was really just a dictator.
>
> He was arrested for smuggling "smack."

3. Enclose titles of poems, short stories, articles, lectures, chapters of books, short musical compositions, and radio and TV programs.

> Robert Frost's "After Apple-Picking"
>
> Cynthia Ozick's "Rosa"
>
> The third chapter of Treasure Island is entitled "The Black Spot."
>
> "All the Things You Are"
>
> Debussy's "Clair de lune"
>
> NBC's "Today Show"

4. Are used with other punctuation marks in the following ways:

The period and the comma fall within the quotation marks.

> "I am leaving," she said.
>
> It was unclear how she maintained such an estate on "a small annuity."

The colon and semicolon fall outside the quotation marks.

> There was only one thing to do when he said "I may not run": promise him a large campaign contribution.
>
> He spoke of his "little cottage in the country"; he might better have called it a mansion.

The dash, the question mark, and the exclamation point fall within the quotation marks when they refer to the quoted matter only; they fall outside when they refer to the whole sentence.

> "I can't see how—" he started to say.
>
> He asked, "When did she leave?"
>
> What is the meaning of "the open door"?
>
> The sergeant shouted "Halt!"
>
> Save us from his "mercy"!

5. Are not used with yes or no except in direct discourse.

> She said yes to all our requests.

6. Are not used with lengthy quotations set off from the text.

> He took the title for his biography of Thoreau from a passage in Walden:
>
> > I long ago lost a hound, a bay horse, and a turtle-dove, and am still on their trail. . . . I have met one or two who had heard the hound, and the tramp of the horse, and even seen the dove disappear behind a cloud, and they seemed as anxious to recover them as if they had lost them themselves.
>
> However, the title A Hound, a Bay Horse, and a Turtle-Dove probably puzzled some readers.

Quotation Marks, Single ‘ ’

1. Enclose a quotation within a quotation in American usage. When both single and double quotation marks occur at the end of a sentence, the period typically falls within both sets of marks.

> The witness said, “I distinctly heard him say, ‘Don't be late,’ and then heard the door close.”
> The witness said, “I distinctly heard him say, ‘Don't be late.’ ”

2. Are sometimes used in place of double quotation marks, especially in British usage. In this case a quotation within a quotation is set off by double quotation marks.

> The witness said, ‘I distinctly heard him say, “Don't be late,” and then heard the door close.’

Semicolon ;

1. Links independent clauses not joined by a coordinating conjunction.

> Some people have the ability to write well; others do not.

2. Links clauses joined by a conjunctive adverb (such as consequently, furthermore, however).

> Speeding is illegal; furthermore, it is very dangerous.

3. Often occurs before expressions that introduce expansions or series (such as for example, for instance, that is, e.g., or i.e.).

> As a manager she tried to do the best job she could; that is, to keep her project on schedule and under budget.

4. Separates phrases that contain commas.

> The country's resources consist of large ore deposits; lumber, waterpower, and fertile soils; and a strong, rugged people.
>
> Send copies to our offices in Portland, Maine; Springfield, Illinois; and Savannah, Georgia.

5. Is placed outside quotation marks and parentheses.

> They again demanded “complete autonomy”; the demand was again rejected.

Virgule (or Slash) /

1. Separates alternatives.

> high-heat and/or high-speed applications
>
> . . . sit hour after hour . . . and finally year after year in a catatonic/frenzied trance rewriting the Bible —William Saroyan

2. Replaces the word to or and between related terms that are compounded.

> the fiscal year 1983/1984
>
> in the May/June issue

3. Divides run-in lines of poetry.

> Say, sages, what's the charm on earth/Can turn death's dart aside?—Robert Burns

4. Divides elements in dates and divides numerators and denominators in fractions.

> offer expires 5/19/94
> Fifteen and 44/100 dollars

5. Often represents per or to when used with units of measure or to indicate the terms of a ratio.

> 9 ft/sec
>
> risk/reward trade-off

6. Sets off phonemes and phonemic transcription.

> /b/ as in but

Capitalization

Capitals are used for two broad purposes in English: they mark a beginning (as of a sentence) and they signal a proper noun, pronoun, or adjective. The following principles, each with examples, describe the most common uses of capital letters.

Beginnings

1. The first word of a sentence or sentence fragment is capitalized.

> The play lasted nearly three hours.
>
> How are you feeling?
>
> Bravo!

2. The first word of a sentence contained within parentheses is capitalized if it does not occur within another sentence. The first word of a parenthetical sentence within another sentence is not capitalized.

> The discussion was held in the boardroom. (The results are still confidential.)
>
> Although we liked the restaurant (their Italian food was the best), we seldom ate there.
> After waiting in line for an hour (why do we do these things?), we finally left.

3. The first word of a direct quotation is capitalized. However, if the quotation is interrupted in the middle of a sentence, the second part does not begin with a capital. When a quotation, whether a sentence fragment or a complete sentence, is syntactically dependent on the sentence in which it occurs, the quotation does not begin with a capital.

> The President said, "We have rejected this report entirely."
>
> "We have rejected this report entirely," the President said, "and we will not comment on it further."
> The President made it clear that "there is no room for compromise."

4. The first word of a sentence within a sentence is usually capitalized when it represents a direct question, a motto or aphorism, or spoken or unspoken dialogue. The first word following a colon may be either lowercased or capitalized if it introduces a complete sentence. While the former is more usual, the latter is common when the sentence is fairly lengthy and distinctly separate from the preceding clause.

> The question, as Disraeli said, is this: Is man an ape or an angel?
> My first thought was, How can I avoid this assignment?
>
> The advantage of this particular system is clear: it's inexpensive.
>
> The situation is critical: This company cannot hope to recoup the fourth-quarter losses that were sustained in five operating divisions.

5. The first word of a line of poetry is traditionally capitalized; however, in much twentieth-century poetry the line beginnings are lowercased.

> The best lack all conviction, while the worst
> Are full of passionate intensity.
> —W. B. Yeats

6. The first words of run-in enumerations that form complete sentences are capitalized, as are usually the first words of vertical lists and enumerations. However, enumerations of words or phrases run in with the introductory text are generally lowercased.

> Do the following tasks at the end of the day:
> 1. Clear your desktop of papers. 2. Cover office machines. 3. Straighten the contents of your desk drawers, cabinets, and bookcases.
>
> This is the agenda:
> Call to order
> Roll call
> Minutes of the previous meeting
> Treasurer's report
>
> On the agenda will be (1) call to order, (2) roll call, (3) minutes of the previous meeting, (4) treasurer's report. . . .

7. The first word in an outline heading is capitalized.

> I. Editorial tasks
> II. Production responsibilities
>   A. Cost estimates
>   B. Bids

8. The first word of the salutation of a letter and the first word of a complimentary close are capitalized.

> Dear Mary,
>
> Ladies and Gentlemen:
>
> Sincerely yours,

Proper Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives

Capitals are used with almost all proper nouns—that is, nouns that name particular persons, places, or things (including abstract entities), distinguishing them from others of the same class—and proper adjectives—that is, adjectives that take their meaning from what is named by the proper noun. The essential distinction in the use of capitals and lowercase letters at the beginnings of words lies in this individualizing significance of capitals as against the generalizing significance of lowercase. The following subject headings are in alphabetical order.

ARMED FORCES

1. Branches and units of the armed forces are capitalized, as are easily recognized short forms of full branch and unit designations. However, the words army, navy, etc., are lowercased when used in their plural forms or when they are not part of an official title.

United States Army
a contract with the Army Corps of Engineers
a bridge built by the Engineers
allied armies

AWARDS

2. Names of awards and prizes are capitalized.

the Nobel Prize in Chemistry
Distinguished Service Cross
Academy Award

DERIVATIVES OF PROPER NAMES

3. Derivatives of proper names are capitalized when used in their primary sense. However, if the derived term has taken on a specialized meaning, it is usually not capitalized.

Roman customs
Shakespearean comedies
Edwardian era
but quixotic
herculean
bohemian tastes

GEOGRAPHICAL REFERENCES

4. Divisions of the earth's surface and names of distinct areas, regions, places, or districts are capitalized, as are most derivative adjectives and some derivative nouns and verbs.

The Eastern Hemisphere

5. Popular names of localities are capitalized.

the Corn Belt
The Big Apple
the Pacific Rim
the Loop
the Gold Coast

6. Words designating global, national, regional, or local political divisions are capitalized when they are essential elements of specific names. However, they are usually lowercased when they precede a proper name or stand alone. (In legal documents, these words are often capitalized regardless of position.)

the British Empire
New York City
Washington State
Ward 1
but
the fall of the empire
the city of New York
the state of Washington

18. Names of treaties, laws, and acts are capitalized.

Treaty of Versailles

The Clean Air Act of 1990

ORGANIZATIONS

19. Names of firms, corporations, schools, and organizations and their members are capitalized. However, common nouns occurring after the names of two or more organizations are lowercased. The word the at the beginning of such names is only capitalized when the full legal name is used.

Thunder's Mouth Press

University of Wisconsin

European Community

Rotary International

Kiwanians

American and United airlines

20. Words such as group, division, department, office, or agency that designate a corporate and organizational unit are capitalized only when used with its specific name.

the Editorial Department of Merriam-Webster

but

a notice to all department heads

PEOPLE

21. Names of persons are capitalized. However, the capitalization of particles such as de, della, der, du, l', la, ten, and van varies widely, especially in names of people in English-speaking countries.

Noah Webster

W.E.B. DuBois

Daphne du Maurier

Wernher von Braun

Anthony Van Dyck

22. Titles preceding the name of a person and epithets used instead of a name are capitalized. However, titles following a name or used alone are usually lowercased.

President Roosevelt

Professor Kaiser

Queen Elizabeth

Old Hickory

the Iron Chancellor

but

Henry VIII, king of England

23. Corporate titles are capitalized when used with an individual's name; otherwise, they are lowercased.

Lisa Dominguez, Vice President

The sales manager called me.

24. Words of family relationship preceding or used in place of a person's name are capitalized; however, these words are lowercased if they are part of a noun phrase used in place of a name.

Cousin Julia

I know when Mother's birthday is.

but

I know when my mother's birthday is.

25. Words designating peoples, nationalities, religious groups, tribes, races, and languages are capitalized. Other terms used to refer to groups of people are often lowercased. Designations based on color are usually lowercased.

Italicization

The following are usually italicized in print and underlined in manuscript and typescript.

1. Words and passages that are to be emphasized.

> This was their fatal error: there was no cache of supplies in the now-abandoned depot.

2. Titles of books, magazines, newspapers, plays, long poems, movies, paintings, sculpture, and long musical compositions (but not musical compositions identified by the name of their genre).

> Dickens's Bleak House
> National Geographic
> Christian Science Monitor
> Shakespeare's Othello
> Eliot's The Waste Land
> the movie Back to the Future
> Gainsborough's Blue Boy
> Mozart's Don Giovanni
> but
> Schubert's Sonata in B-flat Major, D. 960

NOTE: In the plurals of such italicized titles, the s or es endings are usually in roman type.

> hidden under a stack of *New Yorker*s

3. Names of ships, aircraft, and spacecraft.

> Santa María
> Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis
> Challenger

4. Words, letters, and figures when referred to as such.

> The g in align is silent.
> The first 2 and the last 0 are barely legible.

5. Unfamiliar words when first introduced and defined in a text.

> Heart failure is often accompanied by edema, an accumulation of fluid which tends to produce swelling of the lower extremities.

6. Foreign words and phrases that have not been naturalized in English. In general, any word entered in the main A–Z vocabulary of this dictionary need not be italicized.

> c'est la vie
> aere perennius
> che sarà, sarà
> sans peur et sans reproche
> but
> pasta ad hoc ex officio

7. New Latin scientific names of genera, species, subspecies, races, and varieties (but not groups of higher rank, such as phyla, classes, or orders) in botanical or zoological names.

> a thick-shelled American clam (Mercenaria mercenaria)
> a mallard (Anas platyrhynchos)
> but
> the family Hominidae

8. Case titles in legal citations, both in full and shortened form; "v." for "versus" is set in either roman or italic.

> Jones v. Ohio
> Smith et al v. Jones
> the Jones case
> Jones

Documentation of Sources

Writers and editors use various methods to indicate the source of a quotation or piece of information borrowed from another work. In works published for the general public and traditionally in scholarly works in the humanities, footnotes or endnotes have been preferred. In this system, sequential numbers within the text refer the reader to notes at the bottom of the page or at the end of the article, chapter, or book; these notes contain full bibliographical information on the works cited. In scholarly works in the social and natural sciences, and increasingly in the humanities as well, parenthetical references within the text refer the reader to an alphabetically arranged list of sources at the end of the work. The system of footnotes or endnotes is the more flexible, in that it allows for commentary on the work or subject and can also be used for brief peripheral discussions not tied to any specific work. However, style manuals tend to encourage the use of parenthetical references in addition to or instead of footnotes or endnotes, since for most kinds of material they are efficient and convenient for both writer and reader. In a carefully documented work, a bibliography or list of sources normally follows the entire text (including any endnotes) regardless of which system is used.

Though different publishers and journals have adopted slightly varying styles, the following examples illustrate standard styles for references, notes, and bibliographic entries. For more extensive treatment than can be provided here, Merriam-Webster's Manual for Writers and Editors, The Chicago Manual of Style, The MLA Style Manual, or the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association may be consulted.

Footnotes and Endnotes

Footnotes and endnotes are indicated by superscript Arabic numerals placed immediately after the material to be documented. The numbering is consecutive throughout an article or monograph; in a book, it usually starts over with each new chapter or section. Footnotes appear at the bottom of the page; endnotes, which take the same form as footnotes, are gathered at the end of the article, chapter, or book. Endnotes are generally preferred over footnotes by writers and publishers because they are easier to handle when preparing both manuscript and printed pages, though they can be less convenient for the reader. All of the examples shown reflect humanities citation style. All of the cited works appear again in the Lists of Sources section below.

Parenthetical References

Parenthetical references are highly abbreviated bibliographical citations that appear within the text itself, enclosed in parentheses. Such references direct the reader to a detailed bibliography or list of sources at the end of the work, often removing the need for footnotes or endnotes. The parenthetical references usually include only the author's last name and a page reference. (In the social and natural sciences, the year of publication is included after the author's name, and the page number is often omitted.) Any element of the reference that is clear from the context may be omitted. To distinguish among cited works published by the same author, the author's name may be followed by the specific work's title, which is usually shortened. (If the author-date system is being used, a lowercase letter can be added after the year—e.g., 1992a, 1992b—to distinguish between works published in the same year.) Each of the following references is keyed to an entry in the Lists of Sources section below.

Humanities style	(Quirk et al., 135) (Baugh and Cable, History, 14) (Commission on the Humanities, 46)
Sciences style	(Mayr 1982, 1–3) (Nowak 1991, 2:661) (Gould and Eldredge 1977)

Lists of Sources

A bibliography or list of sources in alphabetical order usually appears at the end of the work. The following lists of cited works illustrate standard styles employed in, respectively, the humanities and the social and natural sciences. The principal differences between the two styles are these. In the sciences, (1) an initial is generally used instead of the author's first name, (2) the date is placed directly after the author's name, (3) all words in titles are lowercased except the first word and the first word of any subtitle as well as proper nouns and adjectives, and (4) article titles are not set off by quotation marks. (In some scientific publications, book and journal titles are not italicized.)

Forms of Address

Since the relationship between correspondents affects the form of address used in letters, no rigid guidelines can be set down for all occasions; however, the following examples show a generally accepted form. When two or more salutations are shown for the same entry, the more formal comes first. In general, male and female names are used alternately. For any given entry, the form of address for the opposite sex can be easily determined. The female equivalent of "Sir" is "Madam" (or "Madame" when the addressee is foreign). The female equivalent of "Mr." when it immediately precedes a name is "Ms." (or "Mrs." or "Miss" if either is known to be preferred by the addressee). The male equivalent of "Madam" standing alone is "Sir." When "Madam" precedes another title, the male equivalent is "Mr." The male equivalent of "Ms." is "Mr."

Military Personnel

The first entry below describes the appropriate form of address for any member of the armed forces. The central column of the subsequent entries shows only the special rank abbreviations used by the different service branches. In actual practice, salutations will differ according to degree of formality. The most formal will often employ the addressee's full title (as shown in the left column). The salutations listed below generally represent a level of formality between the highly formal and the familiar.

Merriam-Webster's
LANGUAGE RESEARCH SERVICE

The Language Research Service offers owners of Merriam-Webster's Collegiate® Dictionary the opportunity to take advantage of the editorial resources of America's foremost dictionary publisher—at no cost.

The Language Research Service answers specific questions about words and their origin, spelling, pronunciation, meaning, or usage. If you have a question about a particular word, such as who first used it or why it has not been entered in the dictionary, an inquiry to the Language Research Service will bring a prompt, accurate, and concise reply from a member of the Merriam-Webster editorial staff, the largest dictionary staff in America. Questions about the specific features of your dictionary are also welcome, though you will find that most such questions can be answered easily by referring to the Explanatory Notes section, beginning on page 10a.

The editorial resources at Merriam-Webster include a collection of more than 15 million citations (examples of words used in context) and a data-gathering program that produces many thousands of new citations every year. As a Collegiate Dictionary owner, you have special access to these resources and are assured of current, carefully researched replies.

You don't have to be a scholar to benefit from the Language Research Service. It makes Merriam-Webster's experience and resources available to professionals, students, and laypeople alike in a way no other dictionary publisher has ever attempted.

Letters from correspondents in the U.S. should include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. E-mail queries are also welcome. To assure a prompt response, we request that no more than three specific questions be asked at one time.

Take advantage of this unique offer today. Mail your questions to:
Language Research Service, P.O. Box 281, Springfield, Massachusetts 01102 or send an E-mail to lrs@m-w.com.
